
The Four Kinds of Friends We All Need

By Jennifer Dukes Lee

I was a first-grader. It was a warm spring day, so all of the kids had stripped off their heavy coats at recess and left them in a big pile. As I walked past the pile, I heard voices. The voices belonged to two girls in my class — girls who I thought were my friends.

From underneath the pile, they were calling me horrible names. I was heartbroken and spent the rest of recess hiding behind the evergreen trees on the edge of the playground, wiping tears away with my sleeve. I wondered if maybe my friends were right. Maybe I was as awful and ugly as they had said I was.

At age seven, I hadn't developed the inner strength to fight off the lies that found me under that pile of coats. I wasn't much better as the years went on. I encountered more scenarios where I encountered the cruelty of other kids, and I often felt like the odd kid on the outside of everything cool. With each rejection, my self-worth was eroded. All that pain eventually became the story I believed about myself.

I did a lot of things to try to be amazing and compensate for my flaws. But most of the time I just felt . . . weird.

It took me a lot of years to find that my own brand of weird was actually quite wonderful. It took me quite a long time to realize I was preapproved.

That journey toward loving myself — as I was, not who I was trying to be — began in college. Of course, God was a huge part of that. One of the ways He worked was through friends. In college, I found a few people who helped me be the best version of myself, and I did the same for them.

That was a huge step toward embracing who I was and becoming all God created me to be.

Like my friend Holley Gerth says, "The journey of life isn't about how far we go — it's about who's with us."

What's true at age seven is also true at age nineteen, twenty-eight, forty-two, fifty-five, seventy-eight, ninety-two.

Who we surround ourselves with makes a big difference in who we will become.

There are four kinds of people we all need in our lives. (Ideally, one person can accomplish all four.) That said, be with these kinds of people:

1. Be with those who help you be you.

You are wired the way you are for a reason — to make this world a better place and to bring God glory with your unique set of gifts. Surround yourself with people who want to nurture that person.

2. Be with those who believe in your dreams.

We need cheerleaders on our journey. We need people who will see the best in us. We need friends who will help us stand up when we fall — because they believe in our dreams as much as we do.

3. Be with those who make you better, not bitter.

There's enough negativity in the world; try not to insulate yourself with people who see the worst in everything. Negativity is contagious, but so is positivity. Find the positive people and be one of those people.

4. Be with those who aren't afraid to hold you accountable.

Often, the people who believe in you the most — the ones "who help you be you" — are the same people who aren't afraid to speak truth when it needs to be spoken. Keep those friends especially close.

And lastly, it's not enough to surround yourself with these people. BE one of those friends to the people in your life.

Comparing The United Methodist Church with the Global Methodist Church (in Formation)

By Thomas Lambrecht September 8, 2021

GLOBAL
METHODIST CHURCH

What will the proposed new Global Methodist Church look like? How will it operate? In what ways will it be different from what we have been accustomed to in The United Methodist Church?

These questions weigh on the minds of people who are thinking about the option of aligning with the GM Church after the UM Church's 2022 General Conference likely adoption of the Protocol for Reconciliation and Grace through Separation.

Forming a new denomination essentially from scratch is a difficult and complex undertaking. Most United Methodists have never read the Book of Discipline; they trust their pastor, district superintendent, and bishop to know how the church is supposed to run. Therefore, comparing provisions in the UM Church's 800-page Book of Discipline with the GM Church's shorter Transitional Book of Doctrines and Discipline would be a tedious task for most United Methodists.

That is why we have undertaken to produce a comprehensive comparison chart that summarizes the main provisions of the UM Church's Book of Discipline, the GM Church's Transitional Book of Doctrines and Discipline, and proposals from the Wesleyan Covenant

Association's draft "Book of Doctrines and Discipline." The chart shows how most of the important provisions of church governance are handled in the UM Church compared with how they would be handled in the GM Church during a transitional period from launch to its convening General Conference, and how the new church is likely to function after its convening General Conference.

It is important to keep the three documents clear in our understanding. The Book of Discipline governs how UM Church functions today. It was adopted by the 2016 General Conference (with a few revisions in 2019) and is the result of an evolutionary process extending back to the very first Discipline in 1808. We do not know what the UM Church's Book of Discipline will look like after the realignment contemplated by the Protocol is accomplished.

As noted above, the Transitional Book of Doctrines and Discipline will govern how the GM Church functions from its inception until its convening General Conference meets (an approximately one-to-two-year period). It borrows some features from the UM Discipline and some ideas from the WCA's draft "Book of Doctrines and Discipline." It was drafted by a three-person writing team and then amended and approved by the Transitional Leadership Council, which is the governing body for the GM Church from now through the transition to its convening General Conference.

In order to minimize the amount of change congregations would experience during the transitional period, the Transitional Leadership Council sought to maintain continuity with the current UM Discipline where it made sense. At the same time, some critically important reforms were incorporated in the Transitional Book of Doctrines and Discipline.

Ultimately, the GM Church's convening General Conference, composed of delegates elected from among those who align with the new church, will have the authority to formally adopt a new, more permanent Book of Doctrines and Discipline. It will undoubtedly build upon the Transitional Book of Doctrines and Discipline, the WCA's recommendations, and other ideas laity and clergy wish to propose.

The comparison chart is meant to be an easy way to compare how the GM Church will function during the transition, and it gives an indication of some of the directions envisioned for its future. The chart may be reproduced and shared freely. Questions and feedback are welcome and can be sent to info@globalmethodist.org.

YOUTH.

Kids Club! resumed their regular gatherings. At the first gathering the kids studied two verses regarding friendship qualities - Proverbs 17:17 and 1 Corinthians 13:4-7. They then practiced showing these qualities of kindness, trust, perseverance, not getting angered easily as they led each other blind-folded through an obstacle path. Only verbal instructions were allowed. Many laughs were involved! At the second gathering of the month on Sept 29th, they will discuss jealousy with Joseph and his coat of many colors. They will work on cleansing jealousy away - squirt guns may be involved.

Upcoming dates:

Oct 13 - and Oct 27 - at the church 6:30-7:30,

Nov 3 - Shopping outing for Operation Christmas Child 5:00-7:30

Youth58 met twice during the month of September. The main verse of discussion was Luke 5: 1-11. The study point was that sometimes we do our best and still come up empty. Then Jesus tells us to try it another way. "Cast your nets on the other side." Although we may not understand why, if we listen and obey His voice, He gives us exactly what we are needing - in the story of the fisherman, it was an abundance of fish! The youth also put some costumes on, got their fishing poles out, and made a skit video of this Bible story. They plan to share the video during worship at a future date.

Upcoming dates:

Oct 10 at Kevin & Mary Henry's home 6:30-8:00,

Oct 24 Lazer Tag outing 6:00-7:45
